Why choose this course?
The Faculty of Business offers a range of postgraduate research programs designed to develop skills to address a specific problem in the workplace or assist you to investigate an academic area of interest through researching and presenting findings to others in your field.

Overview
A Master of Business (Research) typically involves one year of coursework or research skill development units before embarking on a year-long research program that culminates in the submission of a thesis.

It provides the opportunity to gain expertise in an industry relevant topic and develop research skills. Alternatively, it allows an entry point to a higher degree that can take into account your real-world industry experience.

Postgraduate study can also offer pathways to promotion and career development in your current line of work, or another area if you’d like to change direction.

Business research students are encouraged to attend seminars, conference and professional development activities and to contribute within a team of dedicated researchers working on real-world issues.

The Australian Centre for Philanthropy and Nonprofit Studies, located in QUT’s School of Accountancy, provides postgraduate education for managers in the philanthropic and nonprofit sector, for those who work with philanthropic and nonprofit organisations, and for those with a desire to work in this sector.

The Master of Business (Philanthropy and Nonprofit Studies) can be tailored to meet the particular interests of students with opportunities to pursue practical work related projects and research.

The program equips students with the knowledge and skills for a career in the management of philanthropic and nonprofit organisations and is accredited by the Nonprofit Academic Centres Council, as well being part of the Faculty’s triple international accreditation.
